

COMMUNITY PSYCHOLOGY, LIBERATION PSYCHOLOGY AND ECOPSYCHOLOGY
DEPTH TRANSFORMATIVE PRACTICES, DPC 997

Note: To ensure acceptance of hours, approval must be obtained from Dr. Susan James prior to beginning any transformative practice.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

Graduate work in depth psychology can be enhanced by involvement in self-transformational practices. During the first two years of the program, students are exposed to a number of transformative approaches, including council, appreciative inquiry, dreamwork, public conversation, theater of the oppressed, restorative justice, and somatic approaches to trauma healing. Students may choose to deepen their experience within one or more of these approaches, or propose another (or set of others) that is relevant to their interests, and ongoing work. Each student is expected to engage in a minimum of 60 hours of transformative practice during the first two years of the CLE specialization. A teacher with expertise in the practice who is willing to provide one-on-one mentoring, and is willing to sign off on hours completed is required.

Students are required to request approval in advance of beginning and a log recording the hours they complete.

The 60 hours of transformative practice may be in one or several categories. Their completion is a requirement for the M.A. degree and a prerequisite for continuing to the third year of doctoral studies.

Give a brief description of the practice you are proposing. Include in your description whether this is a new practice for you or an on-going one.

Who will be your witness, guide, or teacher? What is his/ her background and/ or qualifications?

Approval Request Form must be submitted via email to Dr. Susan James.
